

Will Stellantis build a new EV battery factory in Spain?

Madrid (AFP) - Car giant Stellantis and Chinese manufacturer CATL said Tuesday they would build a $4.3-billion factory to make electric vehicle batteries in Spain, the latest bid to boost Europe's troubled EV drive. They said they aim to start production by the end of 2026 at the site in the northern city of Zaragoza.

Will a new electric car battery factory in Zaragoza open in 2026?

A JOINT venture will see EUR4.1 billion spent on a new electric car battery factory in Zaragoza with an opening date of late 2026. Stellantis and Chinese battery maker CATL say the plant would produce lithium-iron phosphate batteries -- also known as LFP -- which are cheaper than conventional units and therefore more attractive to potential car buyers.

Will Spain contribute EUR133 million to a battery production base?

Spain's Industry Minister Jordi Hereu said in October that Madrid will contribute EUR133 million to a planned battery production base operated by Stellantis and CATL. LFP batteries cost less than more energy-dense nickel cobalt manganese (NCM) ones. [CATL statement]

Where will CATL's battery factory be located in Europe?

The Zaragoza site would be CATL's third factory in Europe; the other two are wholly owned by the battery maker. Spain -- Europe's second largest car producer after Germany -- is emerging as a winner for some battery investments, due to advantages such as lower energy costs.

When will a large-scale battery plant open in Spain?

The first phase of the EUR4.1 billion ($4.3 billion) large-scale battery facility is expected to begin operation by the end of 2026 in the northeastern Spanish city of Zaragoza, with the deal set to close in 2025, pending regulatory approvals, the companies said in a statement.
